POPE FRANCIS CHANGED THE CONVERSATION, BUT CAN HE CHANGE THE CULTURE?

We commemorate the fifth anniversary of his Pope Francis' papacy, it is an appropriate time to reflect on what has changed under Pope Francis' leadership.

Perhaps the most significant change is the fact that the Catholic Church is once again a part of the global conversation. In keeping with the simplicity of his namesake, Pope Francis changed the perception of the church and made it relevant again.

In "The Joy of Gospel," the pope shared a vision for the church, stating, "I dream of a 'missionary option,' that is, a missionary impulse capable of transforming everything, so that the church's customs, ways of doing things, times and schedules, language and structures can be suitably channeled for the evangelization of today's world rather than for her self-preservation."

And he made it clear that his message is not just for "leaders" in the church, it is for all of us. "In virtue of their baptism, all the members of the People of God have become missionary disciples," Pope Francis wrote.

What is significant is that he encouraged everything to be transformed except church teaching. Much like Jesus, who came "not to abolish the law, but to fulfill it," Pope Francis has not changed the church's teaching in five years.

"In virtue of their baptism, all the members of the People of God have become missionary disciples," Pope Francis wrote

In five years, Pope Francis has changed the conversation about the Church with the world and has started a new conversation within the church about what it means to be a "missionary disciple." This is an enormous accomplishment for an organization that thinks in centuries and a world that thinks in days, seconds and 140-character tweets.

Apart from changing the conversation, my guess is that little else has changed at the local parish level for most Catholics and non-Catholics, and the Holy Father's dream of a missionary impulse is not yet reality. Even in a hierarchical organization like the Catholic Church, changing the culture of a billion people is a lot more challenging than changing the conversation

For culture to change, the behavior of individuals must change. For behavior to change, individual bishops, priests, deacons, religious and lay women and men must choose to act differently. Their likelihood of acting differently is often determined by three factors: their prior experience; the existence of behavioral role models; and persuasion from others. In "The Joy of the Gospel" and much of his pontificate, Pope Francis has offered the persuasion to do things differently, but his exhortation alone is insufficient for most.
